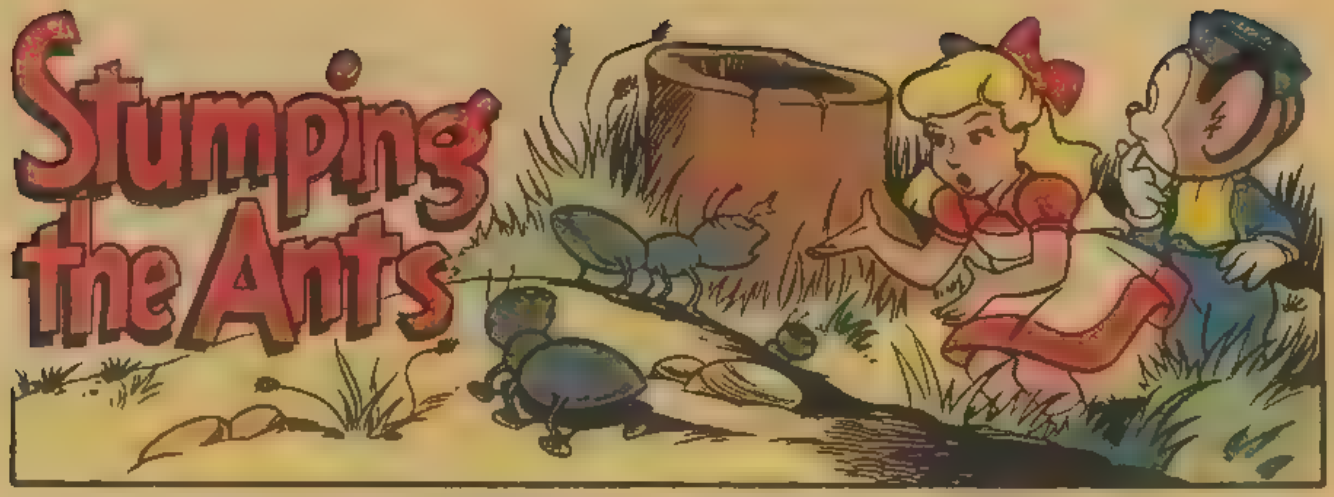
Stumping the Ants



One day Mary Jane was playing happily in her back yard with a few friends when one of them gave a little cry of alarm.

"What's wrong?" Mary Jane asked.

"Red ants!" the frightened girl exclaimed. "Look! There're hundreds of them!"

"Ooooh!" the other girls chorused fearfully, and, before Mary Jane could stop them, they gathered up their playthings and fled from the yard.

"We won't come over and play with you any more as long as those ants are here," one of them called over her shoulder.

Mary Jane sat down on the grass in dismay. "Oh, dear. Now who will I play with?" she moaned.

"You can always play with me!" a little voice spoke up from behind a toadstool.

"Oh, hello, Sniffles," Mary Jane said, her face brightening a little at the sight of her small friend.

"Don't say another word," Sniffles said, hopping up on top of the toadstool. "I heard everything that happened, and there's only one thing to do."

"What's that?" Mary Jane asked hopefully.

"You'll just have to make yourself small and explain the trouble to the ants. Maybe they'll go away then!"

"Of course! That's a wonderful idea!" Mary Jane agreed.

Immediately she covered her face with both hands and chanted: "Now I close my eyes real tight, Then I wish with all my might, Magic words of poof, poof, piffles, Make me just as small as Sniffles!"

In the next moment, Mary Jane was no bigger than the toadstool Sniffles was perched on.

"Well, let's go," Sniffles said.

The two little playmates marched over to the nearest ant who was busily dragging a huge leaf to its home.

"Mister Ant," Mary Jane said politely, "I'm sorry to disturb you, but this is my yard you're building your home in and you're frightening all my friends away!"

"Oh, my!" the ant gasped. "I certainly don't want to do that — but I can't help it if people are afraid of me and my uncles. We're perfectly harmless, you know, and spend most of the day eating the insects that destroy your pretty flowers."

"I know," Mary Jane nodded. "But what am I to do? As long as you're here, my friends won't come over and play with me!"

"That is a problem, all right!" the ant nodded in agreement. "We would have much preferred to make our home in that old stump by the fence, but it's surrounded by thick weeds and is too hard to get at."

"Well, if that's all that's keeping you from moving away from here, I'll soon take care of that!" Mary Jane vowed. "But you must promise me that, if I clear the weeds away, you'll move."

"Oh, it's a promise, all right!" the little red ant assured her.

Returning to her normal size, Mary Jane got her father's hoe and began chopping down the weeds vigorously. The little red ants and Sniffles helped by hauling away as much of the debris as they could carry, and within a short while the ants were busy hollowing out a new home in the stump.

"Well," Sniffles said with satisfaction, "I guess that problem didn't stump us for very long!"
